

DESIGNProfile

A LIFE IN DESIGN

INDIA MAHDAVI

The international interior and furniture designer on creating her Hollywood-glam schemes and some crucial decorating dos and don'ts

Interview - Charlotte Luxford

CLOCKWISE FROM BOTTOM LEFT: Betop a Lula bamboo trays, from approx £130 each, India Mahdavi; a portrait of the Paris-based designer; intricate detailing in the banquet seating created by India for the Café Germain in Paris; India gave the Monte-Carlo Beach hotel a Doro look; and Kiriko porcelain table lamp, approx £80, India Mahdavi

Photography: (clockwise from top left) Paolo Bosschi (Monte Carlo Beach Hotel), © Arnyg

For someone who started out as an architecture student, but wanted to make films, India Mahdavi has found her calling in a roundabout way. Fifteen years after setting up her interior design studio, she has no regrets. With her playful use of colour and witty feminine style, it's no wonder the likes of Claridge's and The Connaught knock on her door when they want to inject a bit of fun into their hotels.

What influences your designs?

I work a lot with my memory. My use of colour harks back to my childhood, especially the late Sixties, early Seventies when I lived in Cambridge, Massachusetts. There were lots of these powerful, poppy colours that always struck me as very joyful and that's reflected in my work. My interiors and pieces often have something whimsical and playful about them.

So how do you use colour in your interiors?

I think of colour as an identifier of a space. It's like when you take a photo and you remember that place because of a strong association - for me, that's colour. For example, pink will come to mind for many when they think of my interior for The Gallery Restaurant at Sketch in Mayfair, or turquoise if they have visited the Condesa DF hotel in Mexico. As for introducing colour in the home, I think you have to use at least three or four shades. If you choose just two, it's like 'yes, no, yes, no' and that's kind of boring.

What's the key to a successful interior?

I always say a home is like a wardrobe - it should never stay static. Look at the fashion industry, for example. You renew your wardrobe every season, adding new things to wear with existing staples and I think a home should be like that. Move things around, swap your artwork and add accessories, so you're always surprised - in a good way. It keeps things dynamic. When I do private commissions, I think of them as 3-D portraits because the interior should reflect a homeowner.

DESIGN Profile

Is that something you do in your own home?
 Not! I'm always changing things around and rearranging, but there are always pieces that stay. I've got a lot of my own possessions at home, such as the Lullaby floor lamp and Jilly the table. It's all about building layers. I love the word eclectic. Just because my apartment is a bit of a mess and very relaxed. When you step outside, you can sense that it's been put together as an ensemble, but it doesn't look over-designed. I love my collection of books, for example.

Are you in trouble for using patterns?
 I'm always getting the biggest samples possible, so that you can see them all together to see how they look. One great trick when you're in a shop is to take a photo of your space. It helps to take a step back and you'll start to see what you couldn't see before. The study into pattern came late in the movement. I'm working on a collection of items right now for Blooming. They're inspired by the Pop and Swanton eras, with surprising cultural connections and graphic motifs.

Your interior for Sketch has a very strong identity. What inspired that look?

Sketch was a very specific project because I needed to address the surrounding space - it was already very masculine, high and demanding. I wanted to counterbalance the wifly wall graphics by using David Cheng's with something sleek and comfortable. So I introduced a Hollywood glamour feel, with the girls and expose joints adding warmth and sensuality. On the opening night, it seemed like all the guests had a three-day tan - everyone looked beautiful and glowing.

How do you balance masculine properties with femininity. Is that key to your work?
 I mention this a lot in my book Home Chic. Discussing with Steve actually. My home's round, soft and sensual. I'd describe an feminine and anything geometric and make sure that femininity is more masculine. For instance, my O'Shea sofa has a structured, square shape, which is very masculine, so I've covered it in light velvet for a softer feel.

What made you produce your own furniture when inspired by companies nearly 20 years ago. The market wasn't what it is today. Now, it's booming and there are so many exciting designers. I love the work of Roman and Grace Bourgeois, Pella, Rossio, Pella's (quadrant - not back then, there were very few to be found) apart from the desk table companies that were around in the 1970s. So it seemed easier to design pieces that would give your rooms identity and spirit.

Which pieces best represent your style?
 I think there are two signature pieces. There's the Baking sheet, which is a handy piece - it can be used as a side table, end-table or outdoors. It comes in a range of colours and has its own accessories. It's genuinely my favourite. Then there's the Surf, a round and square coffee table that's very sensual and playful. It has a modular top that can be switched around.

How do you design any new pieces recently?
 Well, the first order for Pella India, which is a French company, I really admire. I call them 'chubby', due to their, because of their cultural design and sense of character. They also designed a new collection of table lamps called The Seducers. Of course, you're got Coonino and Eric Gosselin. They really suit the job working on some interior projects, including a five homes in the south of France, a yacht and a restaurant for French Michelin-starred chef Le Marchand. For more information, visit india-mahdavi.com

'A home is like a wardrobe - it should never stay static. Move things around so you're always surprised'

10. Doriane floor lamp, from 2008, see page 10
 11. India Mahdavi for the Contemporary Furniture Store collection at Blooming, 2014, see page 11
 12. David Cheng's Barmen bar stools, 2008, see page 11
 13. India Mahdavi's collection at Blooming, 2014, see page 11
 14. Jilly the table, from 2008, see page 11
 15. The Surf coffee table, from 2008, see page 11
 16. The Baking sheet coffee table, from 2008, see page 11
 17. The Seducers table lamps, from 2008, see page 11
 18. The O'Shea sofa, from 2008, see page 11
 19. The Pella India collection, from 2008, see page 11
 20. The Coonino and Eric Gosselin collection, from 2008, see page 11

india mahdavi

show room # 3

A 3 rue las cases 75007 paris

T +33 1 45 55 67 67

F +33 1 45 55 67 77

—

E showroom@indiamahdavi.com

—

OPEN

monday: 10am-1pm, 2pm-7pm

tuesday to Friday: 10am -7pm

saturday: 11am -7pm

show room # 19

A 19 rue las cases 75007 paris

T +33 1 45 55 88 88

T +33 1 45 50 11 21

—

E accessoires@indiamahdavi.com

—

OPEN

monday to saturday: 11am -7pm

studio

A 5 rue las cases 75007 paris

T +33 1 45 51 63 89

F +33 1 45 51 38 16

—

E studio@indiamahdavi.com

—

press

A 5 rue las cases 75007 paris

T +33 1 45 51 75 12

F +33 1 45 51 38 16

—

E press@indiamahdavi.com

—